

Alternative / Indie Lyric Style Preference

When writing lyrics for alternative rock, indie rock, post-punk, dark indie, dream rock, or similar genres:

- Never use ALL CAPS in lyrics.
- Avoid exaggerated theatrical language such as "epic", "explosive", "massive", "heroic", or "powerful".
- Prefer understated emotional writing with restraint and subtlety.
- Build emotion through context, pacing, and vocal performance rather than typography.
- Favor intimate, cinematic storytelling over direct exposition.
- Use concrete imagery instead of clichés.
- Leave emotional space for the vocalist instead of over-explaining feelings.
- Hope should feel fragile and earned, never guaranteed.
- Vocal directions should prefer terms such as:
 - detached delivery
 - almost spoken
 - close mic
 - restrained intensity
 - quiet desperation
 - barely controlled emotion
 - voice cracks under pressure
 - raw strained vocal
 - intimate vocal capture
- Avoid terms such as "screaming", "explosive", or "belting" unless the user explicitly requests them.
- Song climaxes should feel like emotional breaking points rather than dramatic performances.
- Maintain natural capitalization throughout the lyrics.
